Read the text and answer questions 9-13:

John Montague, Earl of Sandwich, was an English nobleman who lived in the 18th century. He loved playing cards for money. Sometimes it took hours and hours to finish a game and Montague didn't have time for lunch or dinner. He ordered his servants to bring him some food that he could eat while playing. The servants placed a piece of meat or cheese between two slices of bread.

This is what we now consider a sandwich. The next time you eat one, think of John Montague!

Read the text and answer questions 27-30:

A man entered an antique store and found some beautiful furniture, old paintings and household goods made of silver and crystal. Nothing caught his eye. As he turned to leave, he noticed the owner's cat licking milk out of a fine silver plate. The man knew at a glance that the old plate was precious. "Nice cat you've got there," said the man. "Thanks," answered the owner. "She's a good cat, but I never seem to have enough time for her." "I would like to buy her," said the man. "Sure," replied the owner. "You can have her for ten bucks." "Deal," answered the man. He picked up the cat and headed towards the door. "Oh, by the way," said the man before leaving, "you probably wouldn't mind if I just took that old plate would you? The cat seems to like it." "Are you kidding?" laughed the owner. "That plate has helped me sell fifty cats in the last month!"
